BRUINS PROSPECT ROUNDUP

with New England Hockey Journal's Kirk Luedeke

As we prepare to flip the calendar over to a new month, scoring is the name of the game with Boston Bruins prospects making a positive showing in both the amateur and pro circuits.

Ryan Fitzgerald and Brian Ferlin are both providing a consistent offensive spark for Boston College and Cornell University with the NCAA season in its early stages.

Fitzgerald has not looked out of place in the Hockey East, scoring at a point-per-game clip with the Eagles and surprising some observers with his precocious two-way play.

The two-time Massachusetts state champion with the Malden Catholic Lancers has always possessed a high-level hockey IQ, but the freshman center brings a well-rounded game that allows coaches to use him in a variety of situations. At 19, the 2013 fourth-round selection has made a seamless transition to the elite competition faced at the NCAA level, and looks like a seasoned upperclassman in the early going of his first campaign.

Ferlin said before the season that getting off to a better start than he did a year ago was one of his objectives, and he has backed that up with six goals and 12 points in his first 10 games of 2013-14.

At 6-foot-2, the Floridian does not play a snarly, aggressive game but is adept at using his big body to establish an effective net front presence and is a consistent offensive contributor when using his quick skating burst, impressive vision, hard shot and deft passing touch to generate quality scoring chances for the Big Red. The natural athlete whose father played college baseball may not come from a traditional hockey hotbed in Jacksonville, but he thinks the game well and his overall game has improved considerably in his junior year since arriving in Ithaca, N.Y.

In Providence, 2010 second-rounder Alexander Khokhlachev is enjoying more consistent success in his first full AHL year, as he is adapting to the more rugged and faster pace of that professional league.

Although he doesn't possess blazing wheels and explosive jump on his skates, "Koko" compensates with slick puck skills and the high-end creativity to make plays in tight spaces. Looking ever more comfortable, the former Windsor Spitfires star has gotten stronger and is showing more willingness to consistently take the puck into traffic than he was in the past. When the 20-year-old Moscow native is on top of his game, he can back defenders off with a dazzling array of moves and effortlessly create scoring opportunities. Although he was scratched from a recent game vs. Springfield, that roster decision had more to do with roster management and matching up than anything performance-related.

Anthony Camara tallied his first career AHL goal against Springfield and has had to make the most of every opportunity he gets, playing 14 out of his team's first 18 games. With so many talented forwards in the Providence lineup, ice time has been harder to come by for a few of the rookies, but the depth will help keep Boston's farm club competitive throughout the season.

BRUINS PROSPECT SNAPSHOT:

Kevan Miller, D Providence (AHL)/Boston (NHL)

Scouting report: With a 6-foot-2, 205-pound frame and quick feet, Miller is a textbook shutdown defenseman for the modern pro game. His skating is above average with a wide-base, good edge control with fluid pivots and direction change. He plays with his head up, looking to advance the puck with crisp, high-percentage outlets even if he does not often lead the rush or attack aggressively on offense. Although not much of a goal scorer, the right-shooting Miller has a heavy shot that he launches from the point and keeps low to the net for deflections. He is a rugged, tenacious defender who staples opposing wingers to the boards and uses his strength to win one-on-one battles or keep the front of the crease clear. A natural leader who captained the University of Vermont Catamounts, Miller has the on- and off-ice attributes the Bruins covet.

Outlook: At age 26, the Los Angeles native is a little older than the average B's prospect, but has earned his NHL opportunity the old fashioned way, with hard work, perseverance, and opportunistic play. The undrafted free agent who signed with Providence on an AHL deal after his final NCAA season earned his NHL contract with a steady, hard-nosed game and willingness to buy into the Bruins culture. Beginning the season as the team's eighth defender on the depth chart, Miller took advantage of his recent call-up by playing the simple, yet effective brand of hockey he's become synonymous with in Providence. His value as a plug-and-play option speaks to the impressive depth the B's have built across the organization. Miller serves as an inspiration to aspiring pros who are passed over in the NHL draft, but willing to do the grunt work and take the longer path to hockey's highest level.

PROFESSIONAL SPOTLIGHT

KEVAN MILLER

With just over a minute let in regulation, and the Bruins up 3-2 over the Pittsburgh Penguins, Head Coach Claude Julien sent Captain Zdeno Chara to the ice.

With the Pens sending an extra attacker out, it was a shutdown mission. Joining him was defenseman Kevan Miller, playing in his third NHL game.

Johnny Boychuk was unavailable, as he was in the hallway shaking off a puck he had caught in the throat.

The next rugged, steady blueliner at Julien's disposal: Miller.

A surprise for some, Miller stepped into the Bruins' lineup that was out both Adam McQuaid and Dennis Seidenberg due to lower-body injuries.

In his third season with the organization after four years at the University of Vermont, and time prior at Berkshire School, a prep school in Western Massachusetts, Miller has had plenty of seasoning before hitting the NHL ice.

"Well, he was solid," said Julien, of opting to send Miller out for the shift. "He was a pretty reliable defenseman for us all night. So he was out there at the end, and I thought he was a good player for us."

"Sometimes you talk about experience but you also talk about merit; and he deserved to be there with the circumstances we were under at that time."

Pittsburgh ended up tying the game with 0.3 on the clock with the extra attacker, before the Bruins earned the 4-3 win in overtime. But the confidence the B's bench boss had in the defenseman could not be understated.

Steady. Solid. Poised. The defenseman draws out all of those adjectives, and more, when you find someone talking about his play.

"He's a defensive defenseman who makes good strong plays; he did that," said Julien, after Miller made his NHL debut against St. Louis on November 21. "He was strong, I really liked his game. I thought he was a poised player out there for his first real NHL game."

He had received his first-ever regular season recall the day prior, with his family soon en route to Boston from Los Angeles.

In Miller's first three games, Julien utilized him on the penalty kill, and didn't shy away from inserting him into any situation, for that matter. He averaged 21 shifts and around 17:00 in ice time.

"I've been impressed with him since he got here," said Chara. "And that's not just right now when he got called up but even in training camp, playing really solid and strong on both ends of the ice; offensively and defensively."

"Preseason, exhibition games, he's just really a solid defenseman to have so I'm not surprised and obviously I'm very happy that we have him."

Miller was the final cut from training camp, before the Bruins opening the 2013-14 season. He had traveled with the team to Vermont for their team-building trip. He fits in well.

"He's a strong, physical D-man. He's physically mature, he can handle guys, he can close well, so he played well," Bruins General Manager Peter Chiarelli had said of Miller's play in the preseason.

"Just trying to do my job and keep it simple," the soft-spoken Miller says, of his style.

No cliches here, though. The defenseman keeps it simple, and steady success comes as a result.

He's labeled as a "defensive defenseman," a stay-at-home type like Adam McQuaid, who also merges Boychuk's style and a piece of the shutdown presence Chara offers.

When Miller sees the pinch to keep the play progressing, he takes it - like he did to keep play alive and help set up a goal by Carl Soderberg in his NHL debut.

"I'm not going to do a bunch of spin-o-ramas on the blueline," the defenseman smiled. "But if I can get it deep and just try to keep the forwards going, I'll take that."

"He didn't really get beat in any areas of the game and sometimes, you need those kind of guys that will come in and just, not play it safe - because I thought he did a great job at supporting the attack and made some real good moves at the blueline carrying the puck across," said Julien, following Miller's first game.

"So he just played with a lot of confidence and that's what, as a coach, you ask from those players that come up is just go out there and play; and that's what he did."

Having played two seasons in Providence at the AHL level, Miller has been "seasoned" by the defensive system of P-Bruins Head Coach Bruce Cassidy and Assistant Coach Kevin Dean.

It makes it a simple transition for players like Miller, who follows in the footsteps of Matt Bartkowski and Torey Krug. They have all easily slotted in on the Bruins' blueline after time with Providence.

"They're both great players – Krug and Bartkowski – I've learned a lot from both of them," said Miller. "I think Dino and Cassidy down there really help out a lot and obviously have done a great job with a number of guys. I felt pretty confident coming in because of them."

"They harp on us pretty good and try and get us ready and make sure we're ready in the case the call comes."

Now that Miller has showcased the steadiness that defines his game, it's about maintaining that.

"Just keep it up," said Julien, of the message. "In his case, he'll get in trouble if he starts complicating the game and that's what we liked about him in training camp."

"I was always one of those guys that really respected Lidstrom and Detroit and everything just looked easy for him. Everything was simple, he never tried to be flashy and he was real effective for obviously his team."

"It's not always about how much you do, it's what you do in all those pressure situations and throughout the whole game."

"He just has to go out there and continue to play the same way; have that confidence to bring that game night in, night out. Because from what he did, now it becomes, 'Can you become consistent at doing that?' And if you are, then before you know it, you'll be in the NHL - for good."

PROFESSIONAL SPOTLIGHT

Alexander Khokhlachev

At 20 years old, Alexander Khokhlachev is playing in his second season for the Providence Bruins. He was the second round draft choice of the Bruins in 2011, and checked in via phone call to give an update on his progression through the system.

Just 17 years old at the time, how did it feel for Khokhlachev, known as "Koko" around the Bruins system, to be picked 40th overall by the Boston Bruins just days after they secured their first Stanley Cup championship in 39 years?

"A special day. Before the draft I didn't know who would draft me and after Boston picked me it was just a great feeling to get my first chance to make a team. I had a lot of feelings in the draft and it was a great feeling."

Khokhlachev made his professional debut with Providence in 2012, which was an especially busy year for him. After inking a three-year deal with Boston, he started his season in Russia playing for MHC Spartak of the KHL, and wound up playing in the U-20 World Junior Championship. He then went back to the OHL to play his third season for the Windsor Spitfires before finding his current home in Providence.

"It's been a long year and a really good year; my first pro year. I learned a lot and know what to expect right now," he said.

This storied past led Bruins Assistant GM Don Sweeney to previously call him a "bit of a nomad." Has Koko found it difficult to move around leagues and teams so often?

"It's not just different leagues but different countries; Russia, Canada, America," he said. "But it's all good. Everywhere is kind of fun and I enjoy it everywhere."

It's usually a tough adjustment for international players to come to an entirely new country and adapt to the ways of North American hockey, as well as the obvious language barrier; however Khokhlachev has taken the challenge in stride.

"When I came the first time I was 15, to Canada," he said. "But it's not really hard because there was great people living there and everybody helped me when I first came there. My billet family helped me a lot my first year and the whole time when I lived with them."

"I mean, home is home, but I love everywhere I've been."

The success Koko had in the OHL, amassing 193 points in 152 regular season games plus another 20 points in 18 postseason contests, certainly helped showcase the offensive talent that he possesses.

"The OHL is probably the best Junior league in the world. I had a great three years there. Everything was good," he said. "My first year we went to the conference finals."

Khokhlachev went through his first professional training camp during this year's preseason with the Boston Bruins, which was an exciting opportunity for the young center.

"It was my first time really practicing with NHL guys and it was a great feeling. Tried to do my best every day."

"Everybody [in the Bruins organization] helped me there and if I made a mistake they told me and I tried not to repeat it," he said. "Every day I tried to get better and I tried to learn more every day."

Khokhlachev's raw talent is obvious, and he turned some heads during training camp and his few preseason games. However, there are improvements he must make to his game before he can don the Spoked-B.

"I try to do better every day and work hard and I just see how I can be better everywhere, like all my game. Be stronger, smarter, faster, everything."

Though he isn't polished enough to break through into the NHL yet, Koko realizes his NHL journey is a work in progress, and it's a challenge he takes on with pride and enthusiasm.

"To play in the NHL, the NHL is the best league in the world, so you need to be a really good player to make it. So right now I need to improve my all-around game and try to be stronger and faster. Just keep working every day to play here."
